The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

Claims 1-4,6-16 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Damsch in view of Sobieralski.

Damsch (figs. 1,2) show structure similar to that claimed, including a connector 4 between the first and second mattresses to limit the lateral and vertical movement thereof when in a stacked relationship. While Damsch does not show a tube interconnected between the mattresses, the patent to Sobieralski (figs. 1,5,6) teaches the use of an external fluid connector or "tube" 47,75,76 that extends between various inflatable interconnected components of a seating support to equalize pressure between the components. In view of this suggestion, to have provided the first and second mattresses of Damsch with a connecting fluid tube, to thereby equalize the pressure between them, would have been obvious to one with ordinary skill in the art. The type of connector utilized between the mattresses is considered a matter of design choice and obvious mechanical expediency, as is the type of fluid within the mattresses.

The assembly and use of the above structure would appear to encompass the method steps as set forth.

Claims 5 and 17 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Damsch and Sobieralski as applied to the claims above, and further in view of Kojic et al.

To have provided the back cushion of Damsch with integral armrests, for additional comfort, would have been an obvious modification in view of the suggestion of Kojic et al (fig. 1).

The prior art made of record and not relied upon is considered pertinent to applicant's disclosure.

Pertchik and Anthony show various features of the invention.
